Dear Mr. Brin,

As an Ambassador of Ukraine to the USA, I always strive to find best American policies and practices that can be successfully implemented in my country.

In the changing world, we aim to create new type of economy, free of inefficient consumption of energy resources and ecologically unfriendly heavy industry. Instead, we look forward to develop Hi-Tech IT sector, to promote innovations and to advance new technologies. Ukraine continues to cultivate a strong knowledge economy, with its high literacy rate and education system that focuses on science, technology, engineering and math.

Ukraine is one of the world's top innovative countries. Our IT professionals are working with the leading Hi-Tech American companies; thousands of Ukrainian IT geniuses are involved in developing new software products and establishing promising start-ups. Ukraine's information technology sector has significant potential to become a major export-oriented industry of our country. Potentially we have a huge field for further development and we would highly appreciate more active involvement of Google in our intention to realize our full potential through innovations.

We are changing our country, our mentality and our business climate. We need fast, effective and visible results. And that is the new perspective area of mutual interest. We are a rising IT market and No 1 outsourcing country in Europe. Moreover, we urgently need new approaches and new technology to leapfrog Ukraine forward.

As I am going to accompany Chief of Staff of the President of Ukraine Mr. Borys Lozhkin during his visit to San Francisco on June 22-23, we would be honored if you could find a slot in your busy schedule for a brief meeting where we can discuss possible areas of cooperation.

Sincerely,
